

The book cover features a vibrant, multi-colored marbled pattern with swirling, organic shapes in shades of blue, yellow, red, and grey. A central rectangular label with a thin black border contains the title and author information. The spine of the book, visible on the left, is a solid reddish-brown color.

[Lord Haversham]

THE SPEECH

OF A

NOBLE PEER

1704

SPECIAL COLLECTIONS

DOUGLAS LIBRARY

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
AT KINGSTON

KINGSTON ONTARIO CANADA

( 1 )

---

---

THE SPEECH

OF A
NOBLE PEER

Upon the Reading of the

BILL

FOR PREVENTING

Occasional Conformity.

My Lords,

I Am very little personally concern'd in this Bill: I have no Office, I expect none, nor do I desire any; and yet I pay as much Duty to her Majesty, and wish as well to her Government, as those that have half a dozen.

I shall not, my Lords, enter into the Consideration of the Justice or Injustice of this Bill, whether a Man may be deprived of what he has a legal Right to, without any forfeiture on this part;

A

the

tho' in my Opinion he may; because private Right is always to give place to publick Safety; and nothing else can justify one of the best Bills that ever was made for the Security of the Protestant Religion, I mean the Test Act: But this is not the Case here; the Persons affected by this Bill are such as have always been serviceable to the Government, and are some of the best Friends to it.

Nor shall I trouble your Lordships to shew, that the great Enemies of the State do not so much consider you as you are three different Nations, but as you are inbodied People under one Sovereign. Neither does the Church of Rome so much oppose you, as consider'd under the Notion of Church of England, Occasional Conformist or Dissenter; but as you are part of the Northern Heresy, as you deny the Supremacy, Infallibility and Idolatry of their Church: They have no more Affection for any one of those Persuasions than for another, but equally design the Ruin of us all.

But, my Lords, that which I shall strictly speak to, is the Point of Time in which this Bill visits you; and, in my Opinion, it could never have come in a more unseasonable and more dangerous Juncture: I hope your Lordships will not think I wander from the Subject of the Debate, if I shew a little the present Posture of our Affairs, as so many Arguments that at least will, I hope, justify me for giving my Vote against a second reading of this Bill.

First, My Lords, if we consider what a potent, what a vigilant Adversary we have to struggle with, of the French King, a Prince whose Designs are laid upon the greatest Maturity of Deliberation, carried on with the greatest Secrecy, and executed with the greatest Dispatch: There is no unsteadiness in his Counsels, his Troops are never surpriz'd, his Designs are never betray'd, his Attempts never disappointed by either the Emulation, Envy, or private Piques of his Great Generals: He can bring his Army sooner into the Field, and keep them longer there than we can; nay, can do more with a small part, after we are gone into Winter Quarters, than we can with the main Body of ours in a whole Campaign, and that too when they are commanded by a General that has Retriev'd the Glory of the English Nation. Sure, my Lords, all Heads, all Hearts, all Hands, are little enough against such an Enemy.

But, my Lords, what heavy Taxes lie upon us, what a great Expence of Money, and very little Expectation Station of Advantage? The reason why Men cheerfully undergo such Burthens, is because they expect some publick Advantage by them, or at least that they may enjoy the Remainder with security: But when they have no Prospect from what is given, and not secure of enjoying what is left, it will come very hard. We have, my Lords, given great Sums the last Year for the Army; but what great Matter have we done? For my own part, I think no Man can reasonably expect more from what we are now raising this Year, than to meet again here next Winter, and give more, and so on.

And as to our Navy, what a vast and fruitless Expence have we been at? I confess to your Lordships, when I consider these two Heads, it puts me in mind of old Jacob's Prophecy of his Son Issachar, in the 49th Chapter of Genesis, Issachar is a strong Ass couching under two Bardans, he bowed his Shoulder to be w, and became a Servant to Tribute. I believe this Prophecy has been fulfill'd elsewhere.

Was there ever such an Expedition undertaken as that into the Streights last Summer? I could never yet meet with that Man who could give a reasonable account of it: Sure, no Man will say, That it was to carry out your Trade; that was to put the Nation to a Million-Expence to carry out three or four hundred thousand Pounds, and make a Kind of Necessity of as much more to bring it home: Nor, will any Man, I think, own that too great a Force was sent thither to make the Italian Princes declare for the Emperor, and then leave them to the Mercy of the French? 'Tis very true, so vast a Fleet plainly shew'd how formidable a power the Confederates were by Sea; but sure, it shew'd also the weakness of our Conduct, that knew so little what to do with it.

But there is one thing, my Lords, that above all amazes me: Every Body knows that the Foundation of all our Expectations and Designs of placing the House of Austria on the Throne of Spain, is laid on the Assistance we expect from Portugal; we know too by the manner of that Prince's Conduct and Treatment with us, that no Prince is Govern'd more by Interest. Why then was not a greater part of so vast a Fleet left there to countenance or secure him? Sure, 'tis unaccountable that he should have any just cause to apprehend himself either forgotten or neglected. No Man knows what difficulties or delays may force him to.

A noble Lord with a white Staff, gave it as a reason, why, tho' he was against the bringing in of this Bill, yet since it had pass'd another place, he was for it, because the not passing of it now, he feared would create a great disturbance in our Affairs, which I take to be a great Reason against the Bill: For 'tis very well known the Lending Part of the Nation are most concern'd in it; and if this Bill should pass, the sad Effects of it would soon be found in the Exchequer.

Besides all this, my Lords, what great and irreparable Losses have we had? The Parliament may Vote Money, and Money may build Ships; but 'tis impossible to recover our Seamen, nor is there any Encouragement to them, or Nursery for them.

There is one thing more my Lords, which I will at present but name; because upon some other occasion I intend to speak more on that Point. It may perhaps seem too big to be named, but I shall never think any thing so, that may prove dangerous to the Crown or Government: It is the extraordinary Favour of one or two Persons. A thing that has been very fatal to the Royal Family; and what has been may be. I will only in short say, When all the Favour is bestow'd upon one or two Persons, when all the Power by Sea and Land is either virtually or openly in one Hand; when all the Offices, like a Set of Locks, are commanded by one Master-Key; I pray God it never again prove fatal both to Crown and Country.

Give me leave only to recapitulate and say, whether your Lordships consider the present Posture of our Affairs, either at Home or Abroad, by Sea or Land, in Court or Camp, I can never think this a proper time for such a Bill.

